

ENFJ “The Giver”

ENFJ's are people-focused individuals. More so than any other type, they have excellent people skills. They understand and care about people, and have a special talent for bringing out the best in others. ENFJ's main interest in life is giving love, support, and a good time to other people. They are focused on understanding, supporting, and encouraging others.

ENFJ's have the tendency to be hard on themselves and turn to negative thoughts when alone. It's natural to their personality type that they will tend to place other people's needs above their own, but they need to stay aware of their own needs so that they don't sacrifice themselves in their drive to help others.

People love ENFJ's. They are fun to be with and truly understand and love people. They are typically very straight forward and honest. Usually ENFJ's have a lot of self-confidence and have a great amount of ability to do many different things. They are generally bright, full of potential, energetic and fast-paced. They are usually good at anything which captures their interest. ENFJ's like for things to be well-organized and structured.

In general, ENFJ's are charming, warm, gracious, creative, and diverse individuals. They also have a special ability to see the potential in others— and combined with a genuine drive to help people— makes the ENFJ a truly valued individual. As giving and caring as the ENFJ is, they need to remember to value their own needs as well as the needs of others.

Possible Career Paths for ENFJ's:

Psychologist
Counselor / Social Work
Teacher
Sales Representative
Human Resources
Events Coordinator
Politicians
Writer

