

INTJ “The Mastermind”

INTJ's value intelligence and knowledge, and typically have high standards for themselves in these areas. INTJ's focus their energy on observing the world and thinking about ideas and possibilities. They are usually very quick to understand new ideas.

INTJ's value and need for organization, combined with their knowledge and intelligence, makes them excellent scientists. INTJ's are also natural leaders, although they usually choose to remain in the background until they see a real need to take over the lead.

INTJ's spend a lot of time inside their own minds and may have little interest in other people's thoughts and feelings. They are ambitious and self-confident. Many INTJ's end up in engineering or scientific careers. They dislike messiness and anything that is unclear. Other people may have a difficult time understanding an INTJ... They may be hard to get to know if they do not spend time talking with other people.

INTJ's have a large amount of ability to accomplish great things. They, most likely, will not have a problem meeting their career or educational goals. They have the capability to make great strides in these areas. On a personal level, the INTJ who practices respect and puts effort into working well with others has everything in his/her power to lead a rich and rewarding life.
